COURT-ORDERED CHANGES TO NYPD PRACTICES AND POLICIES RELATED TO STOPS AND FRISKS

This FINEST message is being transmitted as directed by the federal district court in the case of Floyd v. City of New York, which involves NYPD policies and practices related to stop, question, and frisk. The case is now settled and, with the agreement of the NYPD and the other parties, the Court has issued an order requiring that certain changes be made and has appointed a Monitor, Peter Zimroth, whose tasks include working with the parties to ensure that those changes are made.

This message outlines below some of the actions required by the Court's order.

I. IMMEDIATE REFORMS ORDERED BY THE COURT AND AGREED TO BY THE NYPD

(1) The NYPD is required to revise its policies and training regarding stop and frisk and racial profiling to adhere to the United States Constitution and New York law.

(2) The department form entitled STOP, QUESTION AND FRISK REPORT WORKSHEET (PD 344-151A), commonly referred to as a UF 250 form, must be revised to include a narrative section where an officer must record, in his or her own words, the basis for the stop. The new form must also include a separate explanation of why a frisk was conducted. The checkbox system currently in use must be simplified and improved.

(3) The NYPD must reform its supervisory, monitoring, and disciplinary policies and practices. These reforms include: (i) the adoption of new policies ensuring that NYPD supervisors review the constitutionality of stops conducted by police officers; (ii) changes to the process for imposing discipline on officers following substantiated CCRB findings of misconduct during stops; and (iii) the tracking and investigating of civilian complaints of racial profiling by the NYPD.

(4) Body-Worn Cameras – The NYPD must institute a pilot project in which body-worn cameras are worn for a one year period by officers on patrol in one precinct per borough—specifically the precinct with the highest number of stops during 2012. The current voluntary body-worn camera project, which was launched in November 2014 pursuant to Operations Order No. 48, is not the court-ordered pilot project.

II. JOINT REMEDIAL PROCESS FOR DEVELOPING SUPPLEMENTAL REFORMS

The City and the Plaintiffs must also participate in the Joint Remedial Process under the guidance of a Facilitator appointed by the Court. The purpose of the Joint Remedial Process is to get input from the NYPD, members of the community, and other stakeholders and to see whether other remedial measures can be developed.

III. BASIC CONSTITUTIONAL STANDARDS GOVERNING STOP AND FRISK

(1) What Is a Stop?

Under the Fourth Amendment, an encounter between a police officer and a civilian constitutes a stop whenever a reasonable person would not feel free to disregard the officer and walk away. A stop may take place even without the threat or use of force by the officer. Encounters involving commands or accusatory questions can rise to the level of a stop, provided that a reasonable person would conclude that he or she is not free to terminate the encounter. Whether an encounter between a police officer and a member of the public constitutes a stop will be judged by all of the facts surrounding the encounter. The officer's conduct towards the individual involved will be a significant factor in determining whether a stop occurred.

(2) When May a Stop Be Conducted?

In order to conduct a stop, an officer must have individualized, reasonable suspicion that the person stopped has committed, is committing, or is about to commit a felony or Penal Law misdemeanor. In addition, the officer must be able to articulate facts establishing a minimal level of objective justification for making the stop, which means more than a mere suspicion or a hunch. "Furtive movements" or mere presence in a "high-crime area," standing alone, are insufficient bases for a stop or a frisk. Moreover, even when used in combination with other stop factors, the stopping officer must be able to specifically describe the suspicious nature of the "furtive movements" that he or she observed, and he or she must not define the "high-crime area" too broadly, such as encompassing an entire precinct or borough. In addition, a person may not be stopped merely because he or she matches a generalized description of a crime suspect, such as an 18 to 25-year-old Black male; if a physical description is the only factor relied on by the stopping officer, it must be more specific than that to form a sufficient basis for a stop.

(3) When May a Frisk Be Conducted?

Having reasonable suspicion to stop does not automatically permit the officer to frisk the person stopped. The officer must have an independent basis to reasonably suspect that a person who has been stopped is armed and dangerous in order to frisk that person. In determining whether a person presents such a danger, an officer may consider all of the relevant factors including the suspect's behavior, prior knowledge that the suspect is known to carry weapons, the type of crime for which the person has been stopped, and any other information that supports the conclusion that the person is armed and poses a danger to the officer.

A frisk is not a search for evidence of a crime, but is instead limited in scope only to what is necessary to protect the safety of the stopping officer during a stop encounter. Thus, a frisk is limited to a pat-down of the outer clothing of the suspect to determine if the suspect has a weapon. If during the course of the pat-down, the officer feels an object that the officer reasonably suspects is a weapon, the officer may take whatever action is necessary to retrieve the object and protect himself or herself, including removing the object from the clothing of the person stopped. However, an officer may not conduct a general search of the inside of a suspect's clothing or belongings unless the officer has probable cause to believe the suspect is involved in criminal activity or is in possession of illegal materials. Probable cause is a higher standard of proof than the reasonable suspicion required for a stop and frisk.

IV. WHAT IS THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE STANDARDS DESCRIBED ABOVE AND NEW YORK LAW ON STOP AND FRISK?

The standards described above are the basic federal constitutional standards for conducting a stop and frisk. New York law is and must be consistent with these federal constitutional standards. New York has codified the authority for conducting a stop and frisk in Criminal Procedure Law Section 140.50.

Under New York law, there are additional restrictions placed upon encounters between the police and the public that do not rise to the level of a reasonable suspicion-based stop. The first type of encounter, sometimes referred to as a Level 1 encounter or approach to request information, does not require any suspicion of criminal activity, but must have some objective basis. In a Level 1 approach, the officer must have an objective, credible reason for the approach. At this level, accusatory questions are not permissible, nor may an officer seek consent to conduct a search. At all times during a Level 1 encounter, the person is free to leave. In a Level 1 encounter, the officer may not create a situation (either by words or actions) where the person does not feel free to leave.

If an officer has a founded suspicion that criminal activity is afoot, commonly referred to as a Level 2 encounter, an officer may approach an individual to ask accusatory questions or to seek consent to search. At all times during this type of encounter the person is free to walk away and may refuse to answer questions or otherwise cooperate. In a Level 2 encounter, an officer may not create a situation (either by words or actions) where the person does not feel free to leave. If the officer does create such a situation, that constitutes a Level 3 encounter, which is the same as a stop and requires that the stopping officer have individualized, reasonable suspicion of criminal activity. Officers are reminded, however, that the facts that develop during a Level 1 or 2 encounter can sometimes provide the officer with an appropriate basis to reasonably suspect that the person is committing, has committed, or is about to commit a felony or Penal Law misdemeanor.

V. RACIAL PROFILING

The federal Constitution prohibits the use of race, color, ethnicity, or national origin as a motivating factor for initiating police action. When an officer's decision to initiate enforcement action against a person is motivated even in part by the person's race, color, or national origin, that enforcement action violates the Constitution unless the officer's decision is based on a specific and reliable suspect description that includes not just race, but other identifying characteristics. Members of the service are advised that Department Policy Prohibiting Racial Profiling, PG 203-25, dated August 1, 2013, is hereby revoked. Individuals may not be targeted for stops and frisks because they are members of a racial or ethnic group that appears more frequently in local crime suspect data. Race may only be considered where the stop is based on a specific and reliable suspect description that includes not just race, but other identifying characteristics. When an officer carries out a stop based on reasonable suspicion that a person fits such a description, the officer may consider the race of the suspect, just as the officer may consider the suspect's height or hair color. When a stop is not based on a specific suspect description, however, race may not be used at all as a motivation or justification for the stop.
